The image displays a 10x10 grid of binary symbols, representing the first 100 rows of the computation of a 5,3 Turing machine. The symbols are arranged in a grid where each row corresponds to a step in the computation and each column corresponds to a cell in the tape. The symbols include various characters such as asterisks (*), dollar signs ($), percent signs (%), and various symbols from the extended ASCII set, including mathematical operators like plus (+) and minus (-), and various letters and numbers. The pattern shows the evolution of the computation over time, starting from an initial configuration and progressing through many states of the machine.
