The image displays a large grid of binary code, consisting of approximately 100 columns and 100 rows of black and white characters. The grid is organized into several horizontal bands, each representing a different section of the Arecibo message. The first few rows contain the start of the message, including the numbers 60, 180, 190, and 200. Subsequent rows contain various symbols and patterns, such as the letters 'Y' and 'j', the number '5', and various binary sequences. The grid continues down to row 40, where it ends with a series of question marks and other symbols.
